2024 MARKS NEW EQUIPMENT DIGEST'S 88TH ANNIVERSARY.

2024 is currently predicted to be the year that we will see a slowdown in the industry, originally expected to happen in 2026. With the rise of inflation, hiked interest rates, and labor shortages, it's expected to be a bit of a tougher year. However, 2023 saw the highest rate of robot adoptions worldwide since 2018, proving that manufacturers are turning to new technologies to increase energy efficiency and enable re- and nearshoring through interconnected factories. The industry also saw the rise in advanced technologies which will further develop into 2024 with manufacturers using artificial intelligence (AI), the Internet of Things (IoT), and data and analytics to help combat labor shortages, increase production and efficiency, and reduce costs.

To manage this era of change, engineers, buying teams, and plant leaders need access to information about the latest, most innovative products and equipment on the market, plus direct connections to the vendors who supply them. With over 250 new products, implementation articles, and case studies added each month for application across the entire manufacturing industry, New Equipment Digest is driven by a mission to help these critical teams find the best new equipment, solutions, products, and tools for their capital projects and to keep those projects running long into the future.

NED publishes 250 new products, equipment, solutions, and tools per month, plus critical articles and insights on implementation and investment strategies for new equipment, case studies, key equipment trends, and R&D breakthroughs that drive the equipment market forward.
